

Message from the Founder

Welcome to the 2013 Timber Creek Charities annual report. We have had another busy year at Timber Creek. It also has been a year of change. Our wonderful physical therapist, Sue Behrens, spent the year caring for her best friend and mate as he suffered through a terminal cancer that took his life in December. We all grieved with her. We had to put our physical therapy program on hold for a while. We are hoping for healing and blessings for Sue, first of all, and then we hope to begin to build our physical therapy program again.

There have been unexpected changes in my life as well, but isn't that true for most of us? Life happens and is sometimes unpredictable and often painful. I know most of our patients and their families come to us for help as they, too, endure difficult circumstances. We remain committed to offering them the best services we possibly can. I once read a quote that said, "We are each of us angels with only one wing. And we can only fly embracing each other." We often find we need connection with and help from others. I think we all feel blessed every day at Timber Creek that we are able to offer help to our patients and their families.

In 2013 we launched a new program — Equine Assisted Psychotherapy. This amazing program is filled with potential, already growing and will hopefully expand in the coming years. Read more on the next page.

Our staff is filled with genuine concern for our patients and their family members. We have patients who demonstrate commitment, hard work and fortitude in their treatments. We have volunteers who remind me of the beauty of giving selflessly from the heart as they cheerfully come to help. We have a board of directors who demonstrate great wisdom in their judicious decisions on behalf of the charity. And we have multitudes of people who believe in our project enough to entrust us with the financial support we need to assist those who come to us for help.

We wouldn't be here without all of that. It is humbling to observe these amazing gifts. With funding from third-party payers, government assistance and insurance continuing to shrink, I worry about staying afloat. I have learned to trust that it will be as it is supposed to be. With the help of Timber Creek Charities, Timber Creek Therapies has been able to provide what I believe are quality services.

We had new referrals and patients in 2013 who gave us challenges and opportunities for growth. It is an honor when we are told a patient's doctor recommended Timber Creek for therapy as they know the services we offer truly will help them.

In 2013, with the help of Timber Creek Charities, Timber Creek Therapies was able to provide services to an additional 172 children and adults who would not have had the insurance coverage or resources to acquire these services on their own. In these challenging economic times, that remains an amazing feat. We are most grateful for the vital role Timber Creek Charities plays in helping our patients. Without that help, we know we wouldn't be able to offer the services we do.

Please know you are welcome to come for a tour and see the services at Timber Creek firsthand. And please know that every dollar donated to Timber Creek Charities and every hour of service is truly appreciated and put to good use!

Blessings to you, and sincere thanks for your great generosity of spirit!

Financial Gift

Makes New Therapy Program Possible

In April 2013, Cindy McCarty received a phone call from Emily Smith at West Central Mental Health Center, Inc. in Adel. She said the center was closing and needed to disperse remaining funds to another 501(c)3 nonprofit group.

Smith asked what Timber Creek Therapies could offer individuals with mental health issues. That got McCarty excited.

"Since the beginning of Timber Creek, I have wanted to include Equine Assisted Psychotherapy, but we haven't had the time, training or resources to really develop it," she says. "I long have felt the weakest area of health care in our country is caring for individuals with mental health issues. Programs are scarce and funding even scarcer."

McCarty seized the opportunity to begin a new therapy program at Timber Creek and contacted Lynnea Andersen to develop a proposal. Andersen is a licensed master social worker from Panora who works at Saint Jude Hospice. She has been certified since 2007 in the EAGALA (Equine Assisted Growth and Learning Association) model, which uses horses in therapy and counseling sessions.

After reviewing Timber Creek's proposal, the West Central Mental Health Center board voted to give funds to Timber Creek Charities. In 2013, $23,125 was received to fund treatment for clients and education and training programs for staff.

Timber Creek's Equine Assisted Psychotherapy (EAP) program got underway in late summer 2013. "This is about using a horse as a partner," Andersen says. "We have clients work through issues while relying on the horse to provide a sort of safety zone. We focus on communication, openness, coping skills and building relationships."

Beth Johnston, a therapy aide and horse handler, works with Andersen. Together, they see defense mechanisms begin to decrease. "It has been amazing to see changes in behaviors and problem-solving skills, and clients learning to identify their feelings," Andersen says.

There doesn't need to be a mental illness diagnosis for a person to benefit from the EAP program. "This helps those who have experienced trauma, are struggling with finding direction, are depressed, or anxious," Andersen says. "It also can help with autism, attention deficit disorder, posttraumatic stress disorder, substance abuse, and eating disorders."

Sonnet Santella, a fourth-grader from Bagley, has been receiving speech therapy at Timber Creek for a year. She has Asperger's syndrome, which has caused several developmental delays. She already was receiving speech therapy through school. But urged by a friend whose children receive therapy at Timber Creek, Sonnet's mother, Megan Widen, decided to check it out.

"She has improved by leaps and bounds during her time at Timber Creek," Megan says. "Not just with her speech, but also becoming more outgoing and social. She has always been afraid of animals, and I never thought she would ride a horse. But she took to it right away, and loves it."

Adding a session with Andersen seemed a natural next step. While Sonnet rides during speech therapy sessions, EAP is different. The client works on the ground, beside the horse. Activities involve grooming the horse, walking the horse, building obstacle courses to lead the horse through, and much more.

"She has improved by leaps and bounds during her time at Timber Creek," Megan says. "Not just with her speech, but also becoming more outgoing and social. She has always been afraid of animals, and I never thought she would ride a horse.

But she took to it right away, and loves it."

"I think it's amazing the things they do, such as building the obstacle course," Megan says. "Sonnet was told she could put things wherever she wanted. But she learned she couldn't force her horse to go through something too close, or do things she didn't want to do. It was a great way to help teach her about personal space. She has come so far and I don't think it would be possible without Timber Creek."

During one session, Sonnet was asked to write down words that would convey feelings. Then she, Andersen and Johnston talked about how those words might be used. "Sonnet has never talked about how she feels about things. But this spring, something happened at school and she was able to talk about how it made her sad, and even a bit mad," says Megan. "That was huge for Sonnet, and something she had never done before."

Mei Mei Riordan is a fifth grader in the Guthrie Center Community School. She lives with her parents Gary and Anne and five-year-old brother Tai about four miles from Timber Creek Therapies. Mei Mei and Tai were adopted from China. Born with a cleft palate that has since been repaired, Tai has received speech therapy at Timber Creek for a year. When funding for the EAP program came along, it seemed a good fit for Mei Mei.

Anne Riordan says her daughter has attachment trauma. "She was in an orphanage the first 14 months of her life, and didn't get the kind of care a child with a family would have gotten. She didn't have her needs met, and was hardly out of the crib. She didn't have the freedom to go through the development stages a baby goes through."

If a child has the feeling no one can take care of her, it's very hard for her to bond and trust, Anne says. "Even at two years old, she thought she needed to do everything herself. We have three older adult children and I knew what she was going through wasn't just the terrible twos. This child would have preferred to live alone."

While Mei Mei is receiving other sorts of help elsewhere, and Anne and Gary are always working on their parenting style, sessions at Timber Creek also are making a difference.

"Since working with Lynnea and Beth,

Mei Mei's empathy has improved," Anne says. "Some of the things I've watched her do, I didn't think she would ever have the patience to do. Once I watched her try to put a halter on one of the horses. The horse wasn't cooperating but she did not get frustrated. She just laughed and tried to think about what this horse needed to feel safe, and to know she was in charge and yet she was kind and could be trusted."

"With attachment trauma, the hardest person to deal with is your mother. The condition manifests itself mostly at home and mostly with your mom," Anne says. "Lynnea and Beth are able to challenge her more than I could ever do. They have helped her find her courage."

This spring, Lynnea and Beth decided to try a session where Mei Mei and Sonnet worked together. Anne says Mei Mei has a hard time with interpersonal relationships. Megan says Sonnet doesn't have many friends. But after one session together, they were excited to see and talk to each other the next time they were at Timber Creek.

It seems friendships—with horses, with therapists, with others in similar situations—can make a big difference.

Timber Creek Charities

Makes Vital Treatment Possible

In 2013, Timber Creek Charities assisted 172 children and adults in receiving services at Timber Creek Therapies who would not have had the insurance coverage or personal resources to get the services on their own. Here are the stories of two of those people.

Lennie Burchfield

In June 2011, at the age of 62, Lennie Burchfield suffered a stroke. The damage caused by the stroke left him unable to use his right arm and hand, and took away his ability to speak.

He spent nearly two months in a Des Moines hospital before returning to Panora. With his wife Sue working full-time, he couldn't be home alone. So he spent his days at a nursing care and rehab facility, where he received some therapy.

After about six weeks, Sue was told Lennie wouldn't benefit from additional therapy. She was familiar with Timber Creek Therapies, and decided to see if he could be evaluated and receive treatment there.

"I am so thankful I did that," she says. "He has been going there for almost three years and has improved so much. He now is home alone while I am at work the two days he does not go to Timber Creek."

Public transportation takes Lennie to Timber Creek three days each week. Allison Stanley, an occupational therapist, works with him both in the warm-water pool and adjacent therapy room to build strength in his right arm.

"After the stroke, his arm would just hang at his side and he had no control," Sue says. "Now he can raise it out straight and to the side. He recently has started being able to squeeze my hand. Before he didn't have any feeling in his arm when I touched it, but now he has feeling all the way to his fingertips."

Lennie also works with Cindy McCarty, a speech therapist, both in the classroom and while on the back of a horse. McCarty saw Lennie three days a week for the first couple of years, and now continues to work with him twice a week. "He knows things he wants to say but he just can't find the words," Sue says. "When he started, he had to relearn the alphabet. Now he is creating his own sentences."

On all three days Lennie is at Timber Creek, he spends some time riding a horse in the arena. Staff members have him follow directions to do certain things, and encourage him to talk. When he returns home, he has homework assignments to reinforce what was done that day.

"He even likes his homework," Sue says. "I rarely have to remind him to do the homework. The staff at Timber Creek has never given up on him, and is always trying different things to keep him interested. He looks forward to his days there."

For more than two years, private insurance helped pay some of the cost of Lennie's therapy at Timber Creek, with additional assistance from Timber Creek Charities. He turned 65 in December 2013, which qualified him for Medicare. But Medicare only covers therapy for "current" stroke impacts, and private insurance only pays if Medicare pays. Now most of Lennie's treatment is being covered by Timber Creek Charities.

"I think we are so fortunate to have Timber Creek Therapies so close to us," Sue says. "With me working full-time, I could not take off work to take him somewhere else. They are so dedicated to him, and to all their other patients. We are very thankful."

Noah Bauer

Eleven-year-old Noah Bauer of Carroll is a normal kid. He loves to play baseball and basketball, he does well in school, he makes friends easily, he appears normal on growth charts. Yet his mother says he has "eating issues."

"Noah has a huge struggle with food," says Alison Bauer. "He has only a few things he will eat, and we've never been able to figure out why. We try to introduce things and he will instantly gag or throw up. He really wants to do it, he just can't. We've had him to eating clinics. He has had swallow studies done. We had his tonsils removed because we were told that might help, but it didn't."

Sue Behrens, who has been a physical therapist at Timber Creek since it opened, is Alison's cousin, and also her godmother. "She is a remarkable woman," Alison says. "One day she started looking at Noah more closely because of his eating issues. She noticed his palms are flatter than normal, and through some testing, realized his balance is off."

Alison says she never noticed Noah had a balance issue. But once he started therapy with Behrens at Timber Creek, it improved "tremendously. He used to be constantly moving while he was doing his homework, and now he can sit still. He used to chew on his shirt a lot, but he doesn't do that anymore."

The therapy has provided other positive results. "He couldn't stand to have anyone touch his neck, but it doesn't bother him anymore," Alison says. "This spring was the first time we've ever been able to get his teeth cleaned by a dental hygienist because before he couldn't handle that."

Because Alison and her husband Jeff have two other children and both work, Behrens picks up Noah each Tuesday for his trip to Timber Creek. Besides physical therapy with Behrens in the pool, on horseback and in other parts of the facility, Noah also spends time with Cindy McCarty to address his eating issues.

"Right now his menu includes yogurt, applesauce, pancakes, chicken nuggets, cookies, and ice cream," Alison says. "The thought of him even holding an apple or carrots in his hand makes him sick. So I know this is going to take a long time. But Cindy has gotten him to eat things such as a chicken breast and a blueberry shake. Sometimes she just works with him to get a new food in his mouth, without worrying about actually swallowing."

Noah has been receiving therapy at Timber Creek for about six months. Because no formal medical diagnosis of his condition has been made, insurance will not pay for his therapy. So Timber Creek Charities is covering most of the bill, for which Alison says she and her family are eternally grateful.

"His favorite day of the week is when he gets to go to Timber Creek," she says. "He loves riding the horse and being in the pool. And he's making tremendous progress.

We are so grateful."

12th Annual Golf Tournament

The 12th annual Timber Creek Charities golf tournament held July 20 at Lake Panorama National raised more than $50,000. Four corporate sponsors provided a total of $17,500.

Brokers International, Ltd. has been an annual sponsor since the first tournament in 2002. That company donated $5,000 in 2013, bringing its 12-year total to $53,000.

American Equity also has been an annual donor since 2002. The company donated $4,500 in 2013, for a 12-year total of $44,000.

Aviva became a major sponsor in 2005. The company's $3,000 donation in 2013 brings its total to $39,000.

American Retirement Systems and its founder Kevin Wingert, who serves on the Timber Creek Charities board of directors, has been a sponsor since 2009. A $5,000 donation in 2013 brings Wingert's contributions in support of the golf tournament to $23,500.

A total of $1,340 was raised with the sale of mulligans and a "Beat the Pro" event. John Dinnebier, Lake Panorama National general manager and director of golf, challenged players to get closer to the pin on the #3 par-3 hole than he did. Ten individuals "beat the pro" and a drawing was held to determine the winner.

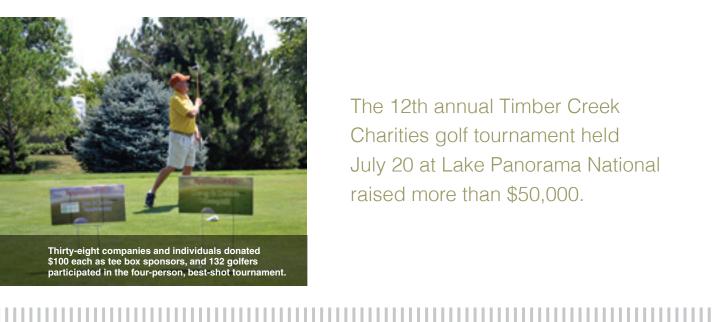

A total of 132 golfers participated in the four-person, best-shot tournament. There were 38 companies and individuals who donated $100 each as tee box sponsors. Golfers participated by paying $75 each for lunch, golf, prizes and dinner. Many more supporters, including Timber Creek patients and their families, attended the dinner.

After dinner, two people who had passed away and designated Timber Creek Charities for memorial donations were honored. Cindy McCarty talked about Dave Wolf, who had received therapy at Timber Creek for several years before his death. Rita Bergman talked about Julie Dimitri, a lifelong friend and wife of Timber Creek Charities board member George Dimitri. Gifts given in memory of Dave Wolf and Julie Dimitri to Timber Creek Charities totaled $12,000.

The year's activities were highlighted in a slide show. A live auction led by auctioneer Shane Boston featured 116 donated items and raised $24,200. Another $2,000 was donated following the auction.

Auction items were donated by Ahrendsen Financial, Bill and Cindy McCarty, Bill and Marcia Hackfort, Carstens Farms, Cheryl Didrickson, Chris and Julie Nelson, Cindy Redfern, Coca Cola, Donna DeShaw, Eileen Goodrich, Flemings Steakhouse, Gary Babcock, GiGi Nelson, Iowa State University, Iowa Hospice, Jean Higgins, Jeff and Deb Hansen, John and Brenda Orrell, John Dinnebier, Judy McCarty, Kaleb McCarty, Keith and Dona Cline, Kelly and Sandy McCarty, Ken Bose, Lake Lumber, Theresa Lanaghan, Madison Christensen, Marissa Christensen, Marilyn Washburn,

The 12th annual Timber Creek Charities golf tournament held July 20 at Lake Panorama National raised more than $50,000.

Mary Jane Washburn, Merv and Barb Krakau, Mike Bauer, Nancy Kite, Niki Carstens, Panorama Gardens, People's Bank, Randy and Carol Hansen, Rita Bergman, Royal Neighbors of America, Roxane Hoyle, Smart Honda, Soil-Tek, Stacey Dreyer, Stivers Ford, and Wanda Smith.

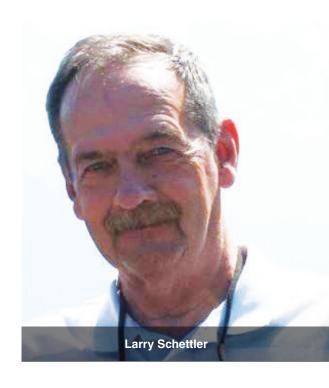

A bonus to the money raised during the tournament was $4,850 that came into Timber Creek as individual donations in response to letters soliciting golf teams and sponsors.

The 13th annual Timber Creek Charities golf tournament will be held July 19, 2014.

(See the 2013 donor list for more information on funds raised by this annual golf tournament, including corporate sponsors, tee box sponsors, auction purchases, golf teams, golfers and additional supporters.)

Memorial Donations

Honor Friends of Timber Creek

The first memorial gift to Timber Creek Charities came before Timber Creek Therapies was completely operational. Don Gillespie was influential in encouraging Cindy McCarty to pursue her dream of starting Timber Creek. Before he died, he chose Timber Creek Charities as his memorial charity of choice. The Timber Creek riding arena was dedicated to him, and a sign hangs there in his honor.

Since that first gift in August 2001, more than $73,000 in memorial donations has been given to Timber Creek Charities. Here are the stories of four people who have been honored.

Larry Schettler

Sue Behrens has been seeing patients at Timber Creek Therapies ever since its doors opened. A physical therapist for more than 35 years, she worked in eastern Iowa and western Illinois, Omaha and Sioux Center before returning to her hometown of Audubon and founding her own business, Preferred Physical Therapy.

Larry Schettler and Behrens were partners for 20 years. When he passed away, the family decided to donate his memorial money to Timber Creek Charities.

"We knew it would be put to good use for a local charity that Larry and I both love," Behrens says.
"It is an honor to be able to assist people who need help. We both worked hard at this when Larry was alive and as a family we felt it would be a good way to continue our efforts after he was gone."

Behrens travels across 12 to 14 counties to see patients in their homes, as well as at Timber Creek. She met Schettler when he broke his wrist and then later, without their knowledge, a mutual friend set them up on a blind date.

"After that we never spent a single day apart," Behrens says. "He was raised near Breda, went to Vietnam, and when I met him, he worked on a cattle farm near Maple River, Iowa. He quit his job to come help me farm, and the rest is history."

Schettler was diagnosed with bladder cancer early in 2013 and died December 13, 2013. A total of $2,900 was donated to Timber Creek Charities in 2013 in his memory.

Dennis & Patricia O'Brien

When their parents died, Tim O'Brien and his siblings decided to gift memorial money to Timber Creek Charities. Patricia O'Brien died in 2008 of cancer. Denny O'Brien died of pneumonia in January 2013.

Tim and his wife Carrie and their two daughters live near Panora. They have known Cindy McCarty, the founder of Timber Creek Therapies, for many years. Cindy recruited Tim as a volunteer to help with a therapeutic riding program before Timber Creek Therapies opened. She recruited Carrie to serve on the Timber Creek Charities board of directors once Timber Creek Therapies was up and running.

While the O'Briens were living in North Carolina at the time of their death, they were originally from Menlo. They enjoyed visiting Timber Creek with Tim during visits to Iowa. "Our parents were very giving people," Tim says. "They would have wanted to help Timber Creek because of all the good things they do for people."

In 2013, $1,000 in memorial funds for Denny O'Brien went to Timber Creek Charities, and was matched with another $1,000 from the Fortunaires Club. Similar donations occurred in 2008 in honor of Patricia O'Brien.

Tim continues to volunteer an hour or two each week at Timber Creek. "Tim is a great, strong side walker helping us with our more challenging patients," says McCarty. "He is so loving and kind to them. We really appreciate his strength and his tenderness."

Yet Tim deflects such praise. "The patients at Timber Creek brighten my day," he says. "Each time I leave, my heart and soul feel better, and I'm thankful I can help make someone's day a little better. It's a beautiful place with caring people."

Milo Sorensen

When Milo Sorensen died in March 2014, his wife Betty suggested Timber Creek Charities as a good place for some of his memorial funds. "My siblings and I quickly agreed," says daughter Marcia Priestley.

Milo and Betty lived on a farm north of Guthrie Center for 53 years before moving into town.

Both battling Parkinson's disease, they both had received treatment at Timber Creek Therapies. Milo enjoyed riding a therapy horse and Betty enjoyed sessions in the warm-water hydrotherapy pool.

"I thought the people there were so friendly and kind to them," Marcia says. "They loved going there. Timber Creek has always been special to our family. We are so blessed to have it so close to us, because it is such a wonderful place for so many people." Betty continues to live in her own home in Guthrie Center. Milo, who lived in a nursing home for the past year, was 87 years old when he passed away. A total of $1,500 was donated to Timber Creek Charities in Milo's memory.
